In her new book, The Performing Arts in a New Era, Dr. Jane Smith examines the transformative power of digital technologies in the performing arts. Through in-depth analysis and case studies, she explores how digital technologies are shaping the future of the performing arts and how artists and organizations can leverage these technologies to create innovative and engaging experiences for audiences.

The book is divided into three parts. The first part, "Creation," explores how digital technologies are changing the way that performing artists create their work. Smith discusses how digital tools are being used to create new forms of expression, such as immersive theater and interactive dance performances. She also examines how digital technologies are enabling artists to collaborate with each other and with audiences in new ways.

The second part of the book, "Production," looks at how digital technologies are transforming the way that performing arts are produced. Smith discusses how digital technologies are being used to create more efficient and cost-effective production processes. She also examines how digital technologies are enabling artists to reach new audiences around the world.

The third part of the book, "Distribution," explores how digital technologies are changing the way that performing arts are distributed to audiences. Smith discusses how digital platforms are making it easier for audiences to access performing arts content. She also examines how digital technologies are enabling artists to create new ways to engage with audiences.

The Performing Arts in a New Era is a groundbreaking work that provides a comprehensive overview of the transformative power of digital technologies in the performing arts. Smith's insights will be invaluable to artists, organizations, and audiences alike as they navigate the changing landscape of the performing arts.
