In his groundbreaking book, This Is What America Looks Like, Martin Gansberg takes us on an unforgettable journey into the heart of our nation. Through the stories of ordinary people living in extraordinary times, Gansberg paints a vivid and unflinching portrait of race, class, and the American dream.

Gansberg's subjects are people from all walks of life: a white supremacist, a black activist, a gay couple, a homeless veteran, a single mother, and a Wall Street banker. Each of these individuals has a unique story to tell, and Gansberg weaves their stories together to create a tapestry of the American experience.

This Is What America Looks Like is a powerful and moving book that will challenge your assumptions and change the way you see the world. It is a must-read for anyone who wants to understand the complexities of race, class, and the American dream.

A Closer Look at the Stories

Gansberg's book is divided into three parts. The first part, "The Color of Fear," explores the history of race in America and its continuing impact on our society. The second part, "The Class Divide," examines the growing gap between rich and poor in America and its devastating consequences. The third part, "The Search for the American Dream," tells the stories of people who are struggling to achieve their dreams in a society that is increasingly stacked against them.

One of the most powerful stories in the book is that of Anthony Ray Hinton, a black man who was wrongly convicted of murder and spent 30 years on death row. Hinton's story is a testament to the racism that still exists in our justice system and the resilience of the human spirit.

Another unforgettable story is that of Leticia Gomez, a single mother who works two jobs to support her family. Gomez's story highlights the challenges faced by low-income families in America and the strength of mothers who are determined to give their children a better life.

These are just two of the many stories that Gansberg tells in This Is What America Looks Like. Each story is unique, but together they paint a vivid and unflinching portrait of race, class, and the American dream.
